Trip Information

Trekking Routes For Annapurna Trek

Annapurna Circuit Trek starts with a drive to Besisahar from Kathmandu Valley. Our drive goes for about 5 to 6 hours. After, we will follow the trail of the Marsyangdi River. The trial goes through Besisahar, Syange, Chamje, Dharapani, Chame, Pisang, Manang, and the beautiful trekking route. Our trekking route will end at Jomsom. This trekking route is a moderate tea-house stay, and it is a classic trekking route as well.

During our trek, we can learn about the lifestyle, culture, and traditions of the Gurung, Thakalis, Tibetan, and Magar community people. Nepal Base Camp Treks (Pvt. Ltd.) is always on your front foot to help by making your trek in this place throughout the year trekking in the Himalayas. We will make your trekking schedule according to your holiday. We will make sure you provide a good trekking guide.

Best Time To Trek Annapurna Circuit

The best time to trek the Annapurna Circuit is spring and autumn. Spring runs from March to May, offering clear skies, blooming flowers, and pleasant temperatures. Autumn, from September to November, has stable weather, clear views of the mountains, and fewer chances of rain.

Avoid the trek during the monsoon trekking season (June to August) and winter (December to February). Monsoons bring heavy rain and slippery trails, while winter can be frigid with snow-covered paths. Trekking during the spring and autumn will give you the best experience with beautiful scenery and good weather conditions.

Permits To Hike The Annapurna Circuit Trek

Annapurna Conservation Area Permit (ACAP)

You need an Annapurna Conservation Area Permit (ACAP) to trek the Annapurna Circuit. This permit helps protect the environment and supports conservation efforts in the area. You can get the ACAP at the Nepal Tourism Board office in Kathmandu or Pokhara. Bring your passport and some passport-sized photos for the application. The ACAP costs around $30. It is essential to carry this permit at all times during your trek. There are several checkpoints along the route where officials will check your permit.

Trekkers Information Management System (TIMS) Card

You also need a Trekkers' Information Management System (TIMS) card for the Annapurna Circuit trek. The TIMS card helps track your safety. You can get the TIMS card at the Nepal Tourism Board office in Kathmandu, Pokhara, or through a registered trekking agency. The TIMS card costs around $10 to $20, depending on whether you are trekking independently or with a guide. Like the ACAP, you must always carry the TIMS card with you. Officials will check it at various points along the trek.

How Hard Is Annapurna Circuit Trek in Annapurna Region?

Although the Annapurna Circuit Trek is moderately complex, it is much harder than the Annapurna Base Camp Trek. Several factors increase the difficulty level of the trek. Some of the factors are below-mentioned:

Trekking Distance and Duration

The trek covers a distance of about 160-230 kilometers (100-145 miles), depending on your specific route. It usually takes 15 to 20 days to complete. The long distance and the daily walking time of 5 to 7 hours can be tiring.

High Altitude and Elevation Gain

The trek reaches a high point at Thorong La Pass, 5,416 meters. Ascending to the highest altitude can create a problem of altitude sickness. You may encounter symptoms such as shortness of breath, headaches, nausea, and fatigue.

Terrain and Trail Conditions

The terrain varies from easy walking paths to steep, rocky trails. Some parts of the trek also include slippery trails, especially if it rains. Also, crossing rivers and narrow paths can be a hassle for you. Thus, you need to have proper balancing skills.

Weather Conditions

The weather in the Himalayas is unpredictable. It keeps on changing. During your trekking trial, you can experience ward days, cold nights, rain, and snow. So, it is always advisable to check the weather and pack accordingly. It ensures safety and comfort.

Acclimatization

Acclimatization is the process of your body adjusting to higher altitudes where there is less oxygen. It is necessary because as you climb higher, the air gets thinner, making it harder to breathe. Without proper acclimatization, you can get altitude sickness, which can cause headaches, nausea, dizziness, and even be life-threatening.

How to Acclimatize

- Ascend gradually and avoid rushing. Don't gain more than 300-500 meters (1,000-1,600 feet) in altitude per day.
- Have rest days to allow your body to adjust. For example, spend an extra night at the same altitude every few days.
- Drink plenty of water to help your body adjust. Aim for about 3-4 liters a day.
- Eat a balanced diet with plenty of carbohydrates to give your body energy.
- These can dehydrate you and make it harder for your body to acclimatize.
- If you feel symptoms of altitude sickness, don't go higher until you feel better. Descend if symptoms worsen.

Is the Annapurna Circuit Trek Tour Right for You?

The Annapurna Circuit Trek Tour is suitable for active travellers who enjoy walking, outdoor adventures, and cultural exploration. While previous trekking experience can be beneficial, many first-time trekkers successfully complete the journey with proper preparation and guidance.

This trek is ideal for travellers looking to experience the Himalayas beyond the popular viewpoints. The route offers a balance of physical challenge, cultural immersion, and breathtaking mountain scenery, making it a favourite choice among international trekkers.

A reasonable level of fitness, preparation for high-altitude conditions, and a positive mindset will help ensure an enjoyable and rewarding trekking experience on the Annapurna Circuit Trek.

Travel Insurance

Travel insurance typically includes benefits such as medical expenses for illness or injury, emergency evacuation, trip cancellation or interruption, lost or stolen belongings, and sometimes even coverage for adventure activities like trekking or skiing. It gives you peace of mind knowing that if something goes wrong, you have support and assistance to handle the situation without bearing all the costs yourself.

When you buy travel insurance, make sure to read all the details. Check what it covers and what it doesn't, like certain health conditions or activities. Compare different plans to find one that fits your trip and budget. Having the right travel insurance means you're protected if anything unexpected happens while you're away from home.
